Implementation of the CBD Kunming-Montreal GBF calls for an approach where "no one is left behind". With this in mind, I think the policies could be more ambitious in setting out how the social benefits of these conservation and restoration activities will be assessed, planned and monitored, with a particular emphasis on ensuring that local communities (especially the most marginalised) are able to fairly participate in public consultations and will equally benefit from the ecosystem services (cultural, recreational, provisioning) that Wales' natural areas and SSIs provide.

To support this, some suggestions:

- Efforts should be made to ensure any engagement with local communities include underrepresented and marginalised groups (are there local groups or networks who can provide views and perspectives?)
- Any data collected for planning and monitoring the social impacts of conservation and restoration measures should be suitably disaggregated (e.g. by age, gender, ethnicity, income status) to understand who is benefiting (or not benefiting) from the implementation of these actions.
