UK Developments

UK Government

24 September: Update: How to prepare if the UK leaves the EU with no deal.

- Exporting animals and animal products if there's no Brexit deal: The EU would require the UK to be a listed third country. In the unlikely event of a 'no deal' scenario, the UK would apply for this status but cannot be certain of the EU response or its timing. Without listed status no exports to the EU could take place.

- Producing food products protected by a 'geographical indication' (GI) if there's no Brexit deal: The UK Government anticipates that all UK geographical indicators will continue to be protected by the EU's scheme. However, if this is not the case, UK producers wishing to regain the protection offered by EU GI status, and the right to use the EU GI logo, would need to submit their applications to the European Commission as 'third country' producers.

- Commercial road haulage in the EU if there's no Brexit deal: Hauliers should consider whether they need permits to haul goods internationally. Up to 984 annual Euro 6 ECMT permits, 2,592 monthly Euro 6 ECMT permits and 240 monthly Euro 5 ECMT permits are available. We expect demand for ECMT permits will significantly exceed supply.

- Regulating chemicals (REACH) if there's no Brexit deal: Maintaining or securing EEA market access. Existing UK registrants would, for example, need to transfer their registrations to an appropriate EEA-based entity (such as an affiliate or an OR) or develop new working relationships with their EEA customers. This would require action before the UK leaves the EU.

- Flights to and from the UK if there's no Brexit deal: In this scenario the UK would envisage granting permission to EU airlines to continue to operate. We would expect EU countries to reciprocate in turn. It would not be in the interest of any EU country or the UK to restrict the choice of destinations that could be served, though, if such permissions are not granted, there could be disruption to some flights.
